One day when we were playing ~~the~~ basketball, I saw Tim wear a pair\ sneakers of my
of style. I thought they were my shoes, so I shouted angry and blamed him for using my personal angrily possessions without permit. Then I went back to the dorm after he could say anything. I opened permission before the door only to find mine own sneakers just under my bed. For a while, I stood there still, my shocking and guilty. When realizing my act must have hurt him, immediately I rush to the court shocked rushed to apology to him sincerely. Fortunately, though he was angry and sad, he pardoned me. With my apologize To relief, the conflict ended happily.

第二节 书面表达（满分 30 分）

One possible student version:

While in primary school, I once tried to run for president of the student government. Filled with eagerness and confidence, I burned the night oil and prepared an excellent election speech, which I was sure would touch my fellow students and won me the position. However, as it turned out, I lost the election. Later, my class tutor kindly pointed out that my speech and plan for the student government was too self-centered, without taking other students' interest into account. I spent a lot of time reflecting on what she said and finally understood what she meant: We should always put ourselves in others' shoes. Yes, it was a failed attempt, but at the same time, it was also a successful one, because it taught me a very important lesson in life.
